

David Johnston HAS A DREAM

When David Johnston came to the University of Waterloo as president in 1999, he had a dream: to lift Waterloo Region to global prominence as the place where people achieve far more, working together, than they could ever build, working alone.

David talks about how Mennonite barn-raising should be a model for how Waterloo Region works best. And he has led by example, bringing the university into partnerships with the cities, the region, high-tech business and local industries to support economic development and striving to make Waterloo the Knowledge Capital of Canada.

From the School of Architecture in Cambridge to the Downtown Kitchener Health Sciences Campus, from the Research and Technology Park in Waterloo to new campus in Stratford, David's dream is being realized.

Thank you, David, for all you have done here in Waterloo Region. Thank you for showing how to lead by collaboration.

Thank you for being the best ambassador the University of Waterloo could ever have.

We will miss you and will continue to work together to make your dream come true.

The University of Waterloo would like to thank the many donors to the David Johnston International Experience Awards.

A special thanks to Herbert Black, Robert Harding, Tom and Toby Jenkins, the Joseph and Wolf Lebovic Foundation, the McCall MacBain Foundation and an anonymous donor for their leadership gifts to help raise over $3 million for this award.
